We have investigated the effects of ouabain, a cardiac glycoside with known inhibitory action on the calcium pump, on the hormonal response to human follicle-stimulating hormone (hFSH) in five primary and three secondary follicles isolated from the follicular fluid of women undergoing in vitro fertilization-embryo transfer. Ouabain (0.2 mM) did not significantly affect either the uptake of ^{45}Ca by the follicles or the in vitro release of $[\text{3H}]\text{choline}$ into the follicular fluid or the basal intracellular free calcium concentration ($[\text{Ca}^{++}]_i$) of the follicles. Although there was no correlation between the $[\text{Ca}^{++}]_i$ and the amount of ^{45}Ca
