A man died of a severe bacterial infection after taking the popular powdered drink Kombucha in Russia, the Health Ministry said on Wednesday. The patient died in the city of Yekaterinburg on July 11, two days after consuming the tea-like drink and presenting symptoms of septic shock, the ministry said in a statement. "A 73-year-old man, a native of the city of Orenburg, died of a bacterial infection after consuming a powdered kombucha drink from a vendor," it said. A lab test showed that the man's blood contained two bacteria -- Enterobacter cloacae and Staphylococcus epidermidis -- the ministry said. An investigation was launched after "
